*Didier Dagueneau was a fourth generation winemaker but also raced motorcycle side cars and competed internationally in dog-sled racing. He believed in the unique place that is Pouilly-Fumé and in the local grape Sauvignon Blanc. Sadly, on September 17, 2008, tragedy struck, and Didier was killed when his plane crashed near Cognac.

The world of wine mourned at the loss one of its visionary winemakers who was 52 upon his death. Didiers son and daughter, Louis Benjamin and Charlotte, took over the vineyard after years of working with their father and understanding his visions.

New York Times said it best "Tasting a Dagueneau wine for the first time was a revelation. His Sauvignon Blancs had an unexpected purity and clarity to them. The flavours were intense but nuanced. It wasn't the fruit that was piercing, as in so many Sauvignon Blancs, but the freshness and the focus. As powerful a personality as he was, his wines did not exalt the stature of the winemaker so much as the beauty of the terroir."

*In the 70s when NASA was shifting from short moon focused missions to the possibility of long term space travel the topic of food and beverage become more important. Charles Bourland, who worked at NASA Johnson Space Center developing food and food packages for spaceflight, was assigned the task of finding which wine would travel best. After careful consideration and testing the conclusion was that Sherry was best suited for the task.

The Milwaukee Journal wrote: "the era of prohibition is about to end in space." Following negative response from the general public and packaging issues the wine NASA scrapped the idea. Scientist-Astronaut Edward G. Gibson explained that: "The problem is that you have got some extremists around and we (astronauts) kind of represent a form of purity. As soon as you taint that purity with alcohol, they really get upset,"

In accord with our discussion on Tuesday, August 8, 1972, I have reconsidered the requirement for a fruit beverage (wine) in the Skylab menu and have concluded that there is no basic requirement for such a beverage.

*Vigneti Massa was established in 1897 and can be found on the eastern end of Piemonte here Barbera reigns supreme. Walter Massa kicked off the Timorasso revolution in the late 1980s. At that time there was only 0,5ha of Timorasso planted.

When he started selling his Timorasso wines for almost double the amount of liras as the revered Barbera of the region it showed how much he believed in the potential and bright future of the grape.

Today there is about 600 hectares, proving that signore Massas vision was correct!

* The local name for Cabernet Franc is Breton named after the monk that made the grape popular in the 17th century. About 100 years after Breton put the grape on the map Domaine du Bel Air was established.

Fast forward to 1979 and the families fourth generation Pierre Gauthier started working in the family vineyards, only 14 years old at that time, and has since then achieved a pioneer status when it comes to quality Cabernet Franc.

In 2005 he was joined by his son Rodolphe, Pierre still helps out with the winemaking, some vine management and contributes with his 45 years of expertise but the main responsibility and the future of the domaine is now passed on to his son.
