Allegrini La Poja vertical, 'Then & Now' – 3 wines 5cl of each: 299

In 1979 when Giovanni Allegrini, inspired by brilliant intuition and a profound understanding of his beloved Valpolicella, decided to plant only the Corvina Veronese varietal on the summit of the La Grola hill, perhaps even he could not have imagined the extraordinary future success of this wine.

Sparkling wines

Champagne

Champagne is one of the few, truly magical wines and it is not just the bubbles that make it so. A product refined from renaissance inspiration and early industrial ingenuity, its ability to tell a story, express its origin, and its journey to bottle is second to none. Usually seen as a celebratory libation, sadly its affinity to food is far too often overlooked. Of the many époques of Champagne, each with its own defining moments, it is what is currently happening in Champagne that is possibly the most exciting. After generations of growers selling their grapes to the big houses that dominated the market for much of the 19th & 20th centuries, they are now producing their own wines with individual character and sense of terroir.

'Remember gentlemen, it's not just France we are fighting for, it's Champagne.' - Winston Churchill

Petnats

Pétillant Naturel, the original sparkling wine also called méthode ancestrale, pre-dates champagne by some hundreds of years, though its constancy almost certainly would have left much to be desired. Whereas the traditional method requires 2 fermentations, Petnat's only undergo 1 that is interrupted and then bottled whilst still active. The resulting wines are lower in pressure, petulant rather than sparkling, and less complex than traditional fizz. Quirky and fun, they are to be enjoyed whatever the occasion.

White wines

Chardonnay: The world's favourite grape

Grown in every corner of the wine world, Chardonnay is wonderfully versatile and arguably capable of producing the greatest white wines. Some claim not to like it though strangely, many of these objectors will happily guzzle Chablis. Because of its versatility and popularity there is a style for everyone as well as one that will most likely offend. From rich buttery oaky versions to lean razor-focused mineral ones and everything in between, we are sure that we can find one tailored to you.

Rhone Valley & Rhone Valley inspired

A small section, admittedly included to mainly plug Viognier, a most unusual variety. The grape of Condrieu, is one of nature's freaks, relatively low in acidity and with a floral, tropical aroma like no other grape which, when handled by a skilful winemaker, it can be honed into pure magic. The other wines of the Rhone Valley are often undervalued, being unfashionable and lacking an identity, at least outside of the region, there are bargains abound here.

Sauvignon, Chenin & other related Loire Valley lovelies

Sauvignon blanc, is after Chardonnay, the world's most popular white grape. Iconic in the guise of Sancerre, it makes exceptionally stylish wines. Unlike Chardonnay however, that will happily go anywhere, with anyone. Sauvignon is picky about the company it keeps and outside of the Loire Valley, very few places can claim to reveal the true beauty of this grape. Chenin, on the other hand, is one of the wine world's best kept secrets. It is versatile in a way that Chardonnay isn't and capable of making some of the most exquisite sweet wines, so long-lived that few bottles survive to reach their peak and dry to semi dry wines that evolve from delicious curiosities into glorious unique nectars redolent with nutty mineral-laden honeycomb flavours. Until fairly recently, outside of its homeland, it rarely made anything of any note, but that is no longer the case with South Africa long having adopted this grape, producing a truly individual expression of Chenin blanc.

Riesling, Grüner Veltliner, and other Allemanic varieties

In the 'roaring twenties' it wasn't the wines from Montrachet but those from the Mosel that topped the lists of the Savoy, Ritz, and other high society hangouts and, like Burgundy, it was site specific wines that garnered the highest prices and most interest. However, post war saw a reversal of fortunes and, due to many factors including extremely poor-quality exports, by the time the 1985 'antifreeze' scandal hit, image was at an all-time low. The region is now poised to enter another golden age, from a resurgence in top quality dry Riesling to the dynamic Austrian natural scene, these wines are in vogue again and currently represent great quality for the price. Watch as they climb the wine lists once again.

Pinot Noir: Heartbreak or Holy Grail? The Goldilocks grape

At its best, Pinot Noir has a unique complex combination of fruit and farmyard. No other wine can deliver such exquisite, ethereal delights or such downright disappointment, and nowhere else in the world is that gulf wider than in Pinot's spiritual home of Burgundy. In the same way an addict chases their first high, when one has a perfect Pinot experience, the rest of your life can be spent looking for it again and it can be a considerably more expensive and soul crushing quest. Beware!

The lighter side of wine: Beaujolais & beyond

Presenting some of the lighter, juicier options from around the world, from dark, fruit-forward Blaufrankish to silky Beaujolais, and from earthier Jura Trousseau to mouth-watering Galician Mencia. These wines are all very food friendly as well as being stand up wines to just enjoy. A lot of these wines also appear in the natural wine section. This is due to many being made by techniques based on carbonic maceration, which extracts fruit and colour but not too much tannin. It is also a reliable way to start a fermentation without the need for the addition of yeast and can provide good levels of natural sulphites during fermentation.

Cabernet Sauvignon, other Bordeaux varieties & Super Tuscans

Cabernet is to red wine what Chardonnay is to white. Versatile, well-travelled, looks good in oak, just as happy to go naked. However, whereas Chardonnay wants you all to itself, Cabernet loves a threesome. Bordeaux, being a marginal climate to ripen the grape, is the archetypal blended wine. The Bordelaise winemakers blend an earlier, ripening Merlot and others to make up for Cabernet's shortcomings. This is less of a necessity in warmer climes, with parts of Chile and California regularly producing Cabernets which best their French counterparts in competitions. Be that as it may, usually by the time these wines mature past their teens, it is Bordeaux's pedigree that shines through.

Simply Syrah

Syrah is one of those varieties that should be more popular than it is. It is likely that its thunder is often stolen by Cabernet Sauvignon. Both grapes show robust dark fruit characteristics, high tannins, high acidity, both have an affinity to oak and age very well. However, historically the Rhone valley was more isolated than merchant friendly Bordeaux. Though in less regulated times, that did not stop the Bordelaise from blending some Syrah into their vats in the poorer vintages, I bet they wish they could have done so in 2013.

Garnacha, Southern Rhone & Balearic inspired grapes & blends

Garnacha, or Grenache as it is mostly known outside of Spain, is an unsung hero of the wine world. Apart from its leading role as the principal grape of Chateauneuf du Pape, it has recently been making super cameos in the dynamic revitalised wine scene around Madrid, where previously unutilised ancient vine stock is now making some of the most exciting wines to come out of Spain. It is also starring in major productions in Priorat alongside Cariñena where they achieve great synergy. These two also team up with superstar Syrah, in some indie Languedoc-Roussillon productions.

Sangiovese & other Italian and Italian related grapes

Sangiovese highlights clonal selection better than possibly any other variety. From the highs of the thoroughbred clones responsible for Brunello (some Italy's most expensive wines), to the watery versions that proliferated Emilia-Romagna and were responsible for much of the village plonk of the 20th century. Thankfully much of this inferior material has now been replaced. Vento is another story of variable quality, but the top wines from reputable producers will amaze even the most critical sceptic.

Nebbiolo and others from Piemonte and NW Italy

Nebbiolo is a true Italian treasure and few would argue that it produces the finest wines of the Apennine peninsula. Thin skinned and almost as picky as Pinot, there the similarities end as Nebbiolo makes wines imbued with a unique structure and tannic backbone that sets them apart from others. Barolo, the ultimate expression of the grape, was traditionally made with long slow processes, aging for many years in large old oak barrels. For the last few generations, a war has ensued between the traditionalists; modernists; modern-traditionalists & traditional-modernists. Confused? You are not alone, however, anyway you look at it, well-made, aged Nebbiolo is among the most complex, transcendental wines out there.

Tempranillo: The pride of Spain

Tempranillo is synonymous with Rioja and quality Spanish wine, characterised by intense berry fruit and an easy affinity to oak. It was for those reasons and a recently completed railway that, when phylloxera decimated the vineyards of Bordeaux, the Bordelaise transported huge volumes of wine from Rioja (often the best) by train. The locals, savvy to what was going on, used to drill holes in the giant casks as they passed by, filling their own barrels.

Natural Wines: Isn't all wine natural?

What is natural wine? The problem is that, unlike terms such as organic, there is no legal definition for 'natural' and far too often it becomes a stylistic concept rather than a thing of substance.

The wine listed in this section all conform to the following principles. Organically farmed, even if not certified; no pre-fermentation adjustments, yeast, sugar, acidity, sulphur etc; spontaneous fermentation and minimal intervention during vinification; bottled unpasteurised with minimal to no use of natural fining agents and lower than 50 ppm of sulphur compounds.
