OUR PRODUCERS

commune of buttons

‘Commune of Buttons began with a single dream between brother and sister; to continue as second-generation growers of grapes, the custodians of a piece of land called ‘Fernglen’ 70 acres of bush paddocks and vineyards in the Adelaide hills at Basket Range. Our dream was to return to the place we had grown up in, to come home to explore new imaginings and opportunities that the soil and sun could conjure.

The reason for the name was quite obvious – the vineyards at Fernglen had always found their success in community, right from the beginning where three families were involved in the planting and tending of the vines. The harvest each year necessitated the help of friends and family to pick the grapes and we wanted to continue that idea. A community to raise a bottle.

“We began organic practices at the beginning of 2012 a journey that has been long and challenging, and 6 years later we are only beginning to unravel its mysteries and find balance in the vines. It’s this though which keeps the commune healthy - a return to the earth. A cyclic process of the seasons the melody of sunrises, moon cycles, rain and growth - and making the right decision! We choose to grow our grapes and to bottle our wines at our place, because it is where the journey began and where it continues to grow.”

- a collection of words from the Commune of Buttons.

'Natural wine' is simply wine made from grapes.

But it is so much more, because 'natural' is not greed, capitalism, chemical, or control. It is a metamorphosis to allow the archetypal beverage to form. Therefore, natural wine cannot be made by greedy people; you must have a relationship with the vines that offer you their fruit, and it would be a sin to manipulate them with chemicals, so they must be farmed organically. To adulterate nature's work by filtering, fining, or any addition, including small amounts of sulfur, is not natural.

"I am proud to be amongst the makers of these wines. Even though there are high risks of volatile acidity, mousiness, brettanomyces, and lactic acid bacteria fermentation, it is enlivening to learn the skills and walk with nature. The most challenging part of natural winemaking is to live with the naysayers who choose recipe over craft. I am thankful for those who support natural wine. It is good for your body and creates a more beautiful world" '

château comme ci, comme ça

“I’m purely trying to make wine that I love to drink: clean chardonnay, skin-contact white and grey grapes, and light macerated reds that are from grapes that are farmed organically and have absolutely nothing else added or taken away. I like to make fun wines to drink with friends, nothing too serious.”

GROWER CHAMPAGNE

Grower Champagne, or Récoltant manipulant, is a classification given to vineyard owners who plant the vines, grow the grapes and harvest them. This method will often produce more distinctive, terroir driven cuveés, the character of which may vary from vintage to vintage. They make up an extremely small percentage (around 2%) of Champagne that makes it onto the Australian market.

Our small selection of producers grow their fruit organically and/or biodynamically. Their work begins in the vineyard where the focus is to create a balance between nature, the vineyard and terroir. As a result, the wine has its own voice and is not a reflection of manipulation. Making great Champagne requires time and patience. In a world where we place limitations on both elements it is a miracle this delightful liquid even exists.

WHITE WINE

Our small list of imports are carefully selected to represent the philosophies we hold dear to our hearts; wine made from organically farmed fruit, fermented by ambient yeast, nothing added and nothing taken away. The styles vary dramatically from un-tamed and wild to clean and pure.
